851 Baptism is usually a big feast
795 celebrated at home some weeks after the birth of the child, with relatives and friends attending. The next big celebration in a young person's life is his confirmation day, a time of presents
585 and gay parties. Weddings used to be the biggest 369 of all celebrations, which in the country often lasted for several days, sometimes even as long as a week. Weddings in urban communities
764 are usually one-day affairs. Funerals were also a time for large gatherings, but the time was spent mainly in quiet conversation.

527 One of the nationally celebrated holidays is St. John Day's Eve (jaani-laupäev), June 23rd, famed in all northern countries as the midsummer (equinox) holiday. The romantic traditions of this night are still kept alive in the countryside and many townspeople go out to celebrate it. Barrels stuffed with lumber and tar are placed

342 used mainly as the sleeping room of the grown-
574 up children or the young married couple, if they are staying with the parents. Also, the guests on their first visit are invited to stay in this room. Since the people seldom go to this room, its floor is exemplarily clean. Often it is covered with a home-woven rug.

356 Cleaning the rooms and keeping them in order has almost a ritual significance for the Votes. The floors and the wall benches were formerly scrubbed every Saturday. But before great holidays, especially before Easter, the cleaning was extended also to the walls and even the ceilings. Therefore the walls of the Votic rooms, even though they were not white-washed or covered with wallpaper, were amazingly clean. In addition to the washing and scrubbing, the old people remember another special method for cleaning which was employed before festivals and weddings. This was the scraping of the walls. The walls of the rooms which had no stove were first swept clean of soot and then scraped still whiter with a special iron tool or with big knives. For Christmas, Easter and other great holidays and for weddings, the floors were covered with
● [764] straw. When there was a corpse in the house, fir branches were strewn on the floors.

584 Customs, superstitions. The Votic wedding customs in earlier times were considerably different from what they are today. Porthan tells that at the end of the eighteenth century the Votic boys did their wooing as they wished, without the knowledge of their or the [582] girls' parents. The usual age for marriage was 15 years for the boys and 12-15 for the girls. The young people informed the priest of their

764 On Votes' burial customs we have a description by Porthan referring to the end of the eighteenth century. According to Porthan, the Votes buried their dead in the graveyard
765 in the forest. After the dead person was buried and the grave covered with a big stone, the people remained for about half an hour, singing special songs (loilotukset) and eating. When they finally went away, they left all the remaining food, such as pies, tarts, buckwheat bread and cabbage, and the drinks, such as beer, vodka and honey, to the priest. The mourning ceremony was repeated at the grave twice a year, on Whitsuntide and on the day preceding Michaelmas.

764 At the present time the burial occurs as follows: The corpse is placed on the floor on the straw and washed (this straw is later buried). Then it is lifted on a bench and the eyes are covered. Later it is placed into the coffin and taken to the church. After the priest has blessed the dead person, he is brought home again and then taken to the graveyard. At the end of the burial the people eat at the graveyard peas, eggs, etc. When they come home, they eat again.

527 Not only the weddings and burials, but many other events, memorable days, major agricultural works, etc., are observed with special customs and rites. Below, some of these customs, based on Prof. Rãnk's studies among the Votes in 1942-43, are briefly mentioned. The so-called hlaari-Day (August 31) was closely connected with the well-being of the horses. Formerly the horses were taken to the yard of the church where the priest sprinkled and blessed them. 585 The wedding ceremonies of the North Vepsians differ considerably from those of the South Vepsians. A characteristic feature of the North Vepsian wedding is the repetitional arrival of the bridegroom's party to the bride's house on the wedding day and the withdrawal to a neighboring farm. Each time, the representatives of the bride have to go to this farm to ask them to come back. In these goings back and forth, one of the two best men (drushka) plays an important role; wherever they enter, he makes a sign of the cross with his whip on [789] the door. Before the wedding party leaves for the church, the wizard (noid) has to perform several tricks in order to keep off the evil. The wizard and the best men have to keep vigil all the time during the wedding ceremonies so that no bad or jealous person will harm the bridal pair. Harm to the bridegroom is especially feared, lest he be unable to fulfill his duty as a husband during the wedding night.

• 764 With death are associated several customs. The corpse of an adult is kept for three days in the house, that of a child for two days. Right after death the corpse is washed and his best clothes put on. On the head of a man a cap is placed, on the head of a woman a white bonnet. Then the corpse is lifted onto 765 a table under the icons. After the message of death spreads through the village, the people begin to gather in the house of mourning. There weeping songs are sung both in Vepsian and in Russian. Hymns are sung only for well-to-do Vepsians.

585 where the crown is taken off her head and a cap is put on instead, as a sign of a married woman. The celebration continues for a day and night, and at its end the bridal pair is presented with money.

•764 Besides the wedding, much attention is paid to the burial. During the burial the old customs are exactly followed and various signs are observed in the fear that they may have some bearing on the life of the living.

527 789 Certain memorable days of the year are observed. Special customs are connected with each saint's day and holiday. On Matthias Day, for instance, one is not allowed to bring light into the room, so that there will be no flies. On Nicholas' Day, the people must boil meat and kill a cock. On Martin's Day the boys put on fur coats, inside out, make a beard like that of the devil, take a cane and roam around, beating children and girls. On Shrovetide evening the girls put white shirts on and go out to make fun. On Anthony's Day net weaving is prohibited, otherwise the pigs will tear it. On the morning of Maria's Day a key is given to the pigs, so that the pigs will know where to get their food. On Good Friday the girls go to the barn to feel the testes of the ox or ram so as to find many bird's eggs in the spring. On Christmas Eve the people go out to look at the stars to find out whether there will be many little lambs. And on Christmas they drink beer, eat

776 social classes, kings and castle ladies, farm hands and maidens, even priests and an army. The spirits are divided, too, on the model of a family, into fathers, mothers, sons and [777] daughters. The spirits have preserved only a little of their heathen origin, but show a strong Catholic influence. Several of them have been taken over from Latvian, such as the God's sons, the sun's daughters, the mother of happiness, etc.

[777] The Livonians' beliefs concerning the
775 dead are strongly influenced by the Latvians. Widespread is the conception of death as a special being (novõ) which predicts the death of the people by noise. The Livonians believe that the body of the dead stays in the grave until the resurrection, but the soul goes during the knell into heaven or wanders through the world. When the dead is taken to the graveyard, other dead come to meet him riding on the animal which was killed for the burial. They sit sometimes on the coffin, which therefore becomes
• [764] quite heavy. The dead person accompanies the burial procession back to the house door or even enters the room. For him a towel, an empty plate and a spoon are put on the end of the table which is closest to the door. Some people are believed to be able to see the dead during the burial. The time between Michaelmas and St. Martin's Day is called "souls' time," since the dead are then roaming around. In former times it was customary to feed the dead with porridge, bread, beer and milk every
